PEOPLE AT WORK

For some people, it is hard to find work of any kind; others often find work but not necessarily the work they would like to do. They are frequently employed in a factory or an office because those were the only places where work was available. However/ in addition/ because/ as a result, there are others who have to do what their families push them into, and/ since/ such as/ although working in the family business, whether they like it or not.

However/ Also/ Since/ for example, there are many lucky people in the world who are able to choose for themselves, therefore/ as a result/ because/ however they are educated and trained. They find work which will suit their qualifications and interests. And/ secondly/ In other words/so there are also others for whom it does not matter if the job is dull or unpleasant or even dangerous, as long as the salary is good
